Converting to exact Rainbow®

When changing to a new food or diet, birds require time to adjust. It is recommended to slowly mix the "old" with the "new" until the birds are accustomed to the new diet as directed below. For best results, limit the portion of food available to the suggested feeding amount.

After 21 days feed exact® food only – your bird should be completely converted. Observe your bird closely to ensure it is eating exact® food and not searching for its "old" food. A color change in the droppings (to a brown or reddish-brown color) should be evident with successful conversion.

Conversion time may vary. For more details or questions on conversion visit the Kaytee website.

Important Notes

- ◆ When more than one bird is in a cage, monitor birds very closely to assure all are eating adequately. An extended conversion process of 7 additional days is recommended.
- ◆ Birds should be monitored closely during the conversion process. If the bird becomes listless, sits with its feathers fluffed or loses weight, it may not be consuming enough food. If these signs occur, immediately provide the "old" food and a mixture of equal parts exact® food and the "old" food (in separate dishes) until the bird returns to normal activity (approximately 3 days). At this time, remove the dish of "old" food and continue the conversion process.
- ◆ Initial acceptance of exact® food can be improved by moistening with fruit juice. Be sure to remove uneaten portion within 4 hours to prevent spoilage.
- ◆ The color of droppings may not be consistent, but they should be well formed.
