Converting to exact Rainbow®

Converting from another extruded diet - Mix the two diets together and over the course of one week, slowly eliminate the old food. This will help avoid the possibility of digestive upsets that may occur.

Converting from a seed-based diet - Some coaxing and a little time is required for the bird to adjust to the new food type. Although an immediate conversion is possible, it is recommended to slowly introduce exact® food into your bird's diet by mixing it with the "old" food as directed below. For best results, limit the quantity of food available to the suggested feeding amount in the feeding instructions.

After 21 days feed exact® food only - your bird should be completely converted. Observe your bird closely to ensure it is eating exact® food and not searching for its "old" food. A change in the color of droppings (to a brown or reddish-brown color) should be evident with successful conversion. Conversion time may vary. For more details or questions on conversion visit the Kaytee website.

Important Notes

- ◆ When more than one bird is in a cage, monitor birds very closely to assure all are eating adequately. An extended conversion process of 7 additional days is recommended.
- ◆ Birds should be monitored closely during the conversion process. If the bird becomes listless, sits with its feathers fluffed, or loses weight, it may not be consuming enough food. If these signs occur, immediately provide the "old" food and a mixture of equal parts exact® food and the "old" food (in separate dishes) until the bird returns to normal activity (approximately 3 days). At this time, remove the dish of "old" food and continue the conversion process.
- ◆ Initial acceptance of exact® food can be improved by moistening with fruit juice. Be sure to remove uneaten portion within 4 hours to prevent spoilage.
- ◆ The color of droppings may not be consistent, but they should be well formed.
